THE Republican party in its benevolence

THE', sluup" in Hills stock continues.

THE instructions for Cleveland all have a string to them.

MR HILL had better get his boom insured in some accident company.

THE Pennsylvauia Democcats in convention should have carried shot-guns instead of pistols.

MR Hill is noticing with some degree of comfort that Massachusetts is not all Cleveland boom.

provides Protection for Democratic working-men as well as for those of its political family.

THE Democratic congress might give Henry George a job as editor of the Congressional Record.

HAS anybody asked Mr. Cleveland if he would take second place on the ticket with "some good western man."

Hill never reads the dealings in real estate, because his boom isn't of the substantial kind.—Philadelphia Inquirer (Rep.)

Quite the same; there's a lot of dirt in his dealings.

If, as the Democrats are yelling, the United States Treasury is bankrupt, why do they seek to reduce the revenues by the no-tariff measures they are pushing through the House?

REMEMBERING gratefully his veto of 524 bills to pension Union soldiers or their dependent, the ex-Confederate States of the South are solid for Cleveland He fills the bill as "a Northern man with Southern principles."

If, with a Democratic majority of 241 it is impossible to get a free coinage bill through the House. how much must the majority be increased in order to secure that end? Can free silver advocates reasonably expect anything else than betrayal from a Democratic mayjor ity.

Are there any Democrats in New Jersey now who believe that Governor Leon Abbett is a "Presidential possibility"?—The New York Tribune (Rep.).

Are there any "Democrats" anywhere who think anybody is a Presidential possibility except D. B. Hill? Aren't all others spurious?

THE Democrats seek to repeal the Sugar Bounty law. They should go the next step and offer a bill reimposing the duty on Sugar. Senator Roger Q. Mills said in Ohio last fall that he would put the duty back on sugar, because it is pratically a revenue tax owing to the little sugar produce in this country. That is exactly why the Republicans took it off. Mills justifies the Republican action.

THE one pheomenon the editor of the Democratic newspapers and the statesman of that party can not explain is the wonderful growth of the Unitep States in the past thirty years not withstanding during all save four years of that time it has been the helpless nation of Republican misrule and oppresion" And the only thing in all those years which has not been improved and developed is the principles of the Democratic party.

It was all very fine Democratic fun inserting free-trade Documents and books in the Congressional Record, but when the Republicans proceeded to show that the rule must work both ways and began injecting Republican literature the Democrats were quick to cry enough. Harriman's pamphlet, Robert P Porter's powerful paper, and the opening chapter of "The Tariff Riddle" were too much fo them and they gladly voted to stop the performance. They got more than enough of their own medicine.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4, 1892,

A democrat accusing the democratic majority of the House committee on Foreign Affairs of parsinomiousness and meanness was odd indeed. but that is precisely what Representatives Amos Cummings of New York, did, referring to that committee's action in consolidating the mission to Denmark with that to Switzerland. In a short speech in favor of an amendment offered by Representative Post, of Illinois, Mr. Cummings said: "I want to rebuke this House for the spirit of parsimony exhibited in the endeavor to consolidate the Danish and Swedish missions. This bill, so far as it concerns those nations, is an insult to 2.000,000, of our Scandinavian citizens. The committee on Foreign Affairs has done injustice not only to the people of Denmark, which nation is monarchial, but to our sister republics of South America. Again I want to rebuke this parsimony. It means really, virtuely legislating in favor of the rich against the poor. For, by reducing the salraies of ministers and consuls, the offices are placed in the hands of plutocrats and taken from the educated, honest, laboring or professional men. I appeal to the house not to place this government in a position where it will be regarded by all countries as the one national miser of the world. "The House then to the consternation of cheeseparer in chief Holman, and his followers in the pea-nut ring of the democratic party adopted Mr. Post's amendment.

The misunderstanding concerning the Congressional appropriation to aid the citizens of Washington to entertain the members of the G. A. R. at the coming national encampment is being cleared up, if the letters apologizing for having opposed it without understanding it which are coming to the committee in charge, fron all sections of the country reflect public opinion.

No intelligent person who sees or reads the proceedings of Congress will fail to agree with ex-Speaker Reed's statement that the present House is a laughing stock for gods and men.

Some people are hard to please. Frank Hatton has discovered that in agreeing to the arbitration of the Behring Sea question "we have been partly bullied, partly cajoled, and altogether over-reached. The discovery comes a little late, but it shows Mr. Hatton to be, in his own eyes, a greater statesman than the President or any member of the Cabinet, which approved the arbitration treaty without a dissenting voice, or any member of the Senate, which ratified the treaty by a unanimous vote. It is, of course, possible that Mr. Hatton may see deeper and know more about this question than any of those who officially approved of arbitration, but it is more probable that his digestive organs have been working badly and have caused him to look upon everything, life included, for the time being as a failure. He has had similar attacks in the past.

Mrs. Harrison is well enough to sit up a portion of each day, but she has not yet been able to leave her room.

The democratic members of the House number just 67 more than quorum of that body, but so many of them are constantly away from their seats that the cry of "no quorum" is becoming very common, and of late it is no exaggeration to say that far more time has been wasted in "calls of the House" than has been consumed in transacting business. And the worst of the matter is that a majority of the democrats when some of their more sensible colleagues have proposed ways and means of putting a stop to the absenteeism, seem to regard the whole matter as a huge joke. Perhaps when they see the returns of the next Congressional elections they will find that the people who sent them here to attend to legislative duties have put the joke on them by electing a republican majority to the next House.

Senators Manderson, and Paddock addressed the Nebraska State Republican Association of this city, this evening. Secretary Elkins told a friend that he was perfectly satisfied that the name of only one Presidential candidate would be presented to the Minneapolis Convention, and that the nomination would be made by acclamation.

During the last Congress a united howl went up from the entire democratic press because Speaker Reed ordered the doors to be locked in order to keep a quorum on the floor of the House, and Kilgore, of Texas, was loudly applauded by the same press for kicking open one of the doors. Speaker Crisp had to lock the doors of the House for the same purpose the other day. Enough said.

The attempt of the political miss Nancy's to get ex-Congressman Allen, of Michigan in hot water by charging him with having solicited contributions for the republican national committee from Federal officeholders was a flat failure. The department of Justice investigated the charge and found it entirely groundless.

A Tammany democrat is said to have made a wager here yesterday of $1000, that neither Hill nor Cleveland would get the democratic nomination.

A Protective Tariff The Best for Revenue.

When the Republican party came into power in 1861 it found a revenue system totally inadequate to the ordinary expenses of the Government. Mr Buchanan's administration had expended about $60,000,000 more than its receipts. To repair this inadequate system, as well as to provide as far as possible for the extraordinary expenditures of the war, a new tariff was framed and on protective lines. Many changes have been made since then, first to force up the revenue to the highest available point, and then after the war to reduce the levies as fast as the exigencies of the Treasury would allow. And the success of these financial measures is now a matter of history. The world was astonished at the magnitude of our income at the rapid payment of the-war debt, at the imense reduction of our tax schedules, at the appreciion of our credit, at the accumulation of specie in the National Treasury. Without going into particulars it will suffice to say that no nation in all the world's history can present a financial record at all comparable with ours. The one fact to be impressed upon you is, that in every change in our revenue laws made by the republican, whether to increase or reduce the revenue, the tariff was always adjusted on protection lines; and every such adjustment has been eminently successful as a financial measure. Our latest tariff the McKinley bill is eminently a protective tariff. While its free list has been extended beyond any former precedent, its protective duties have had strict reference to competitive imports, and to the higher scale of wages and of living in the United States, compared with other countries. Against this policy the Democratic party is now making its fight.

Selling Rights to tax the People.

The Philadelphia Press, having inquired into the question of liquor saloon profits under the system of restricted licenses adopted in that city, fines that the average annual profits of a saloon in a good location range from $2,000 to $50,000. A saloon that only clears $5000 a year is considered a very poor business.

The Press wants the city to get a part of these profits, and proposes that in view of the fact that by restricting the number of licenses the municipality insures dealers a monopoly, it shall sell the licenses, like any other public franchises, to the highest bidders, and realize what it can.

The Press is on the wrong track entirely. Instead of going snacks with the saloonkeepers, the city should abolish them, establish in their place agencies for the sale of liquors at cost to sober persons, by agents having fixed salries not dependent on the amount of sales. This whole business of creating private monopolies by giving away or selling exclusive franchises, is dead wrong always, whether it relates to water works, lighting, transit, or liquor selling. Such exclusive franchises, for whatever purpose given or sold, amount to nothing more nor less than licenses granted private parties to tax the community for their emolument.

The Conquest of Sugar Refining.

Why has any person an excuse hereafter to say that combination means lower prices? The history of the sugar refineries is conclusive upon this point. The wholesale price of granulated sugar was four cents per pound before the trust had completed its conquest of the american refineries.

Since its victory the price has gone up to 4½ cents, of $19,000,000 in a year and this with a declining price for raw sugar, and economies incident to business cooperation, will make it possible for the directors to pass over to the stockholders and bondholders of the trust some 29 million dollars. In other words, the people of the United States are to pay yearly a little over $2 per head for the luxury of having sugar refined by a trust. The government could do the whole business for less than eight million dollars. If sugar was a public monopoly, the injury to many private firms would be accepted as the price paid for benefits so marked and wide-spread; but what have the advocates of the competitive system to say when a private monopoly after crowding hundreds of men out of business, lays tributes upon every dining table of the land?

Governor Russell, of Massachusetts, is in danger of loosing his voice from smoking. If he can save enough to say "the tariff is a tax," and "billion dollar tax," he will be the ideal Democratic candidate.

The Philosophy of Competition.

A Harvard college student took his own life in New York city last Monday. He died, it seems, because he could find nothing to do. The places which he was fitted by education to fill were all occupied. Newspaper men have observed for several years past the growing tendency toward self-destruction among young Harvard students. The situation in the competitive field is enough to discourage any young man at the start, provided he has nothing to recommend him beyond his education and his purpose to act a manly part in life. If he is not selfish, he is handicapped in the struggle for self which is the great aim in business and the professions.

This is quite as true of the profession as of the trades. We quote the following from a correspondent of the Medical Age.

I have endeavored to keep track of 100 of my medical friends after graduation, especially of what they did during the first five years, and find nearly 75 per cent had to resort to other employment to make a living. Twenty-three received a salary either in addition to practice or separate therefrom. Fifteen were proprietors of drug stores. Three were insurance agents Four loaned money. One sold real estate. Three were connected with medical journals. One was agent for drugs. One for books. One preached. One was in the patent medicine business. Two were farmers. One a manufacturer. Two gave message treatment. One sawed wood, and subsequently suicided. Twelve gave up in disgust, and one never tried to practice at all. Twenty-nine graduates only in one hundred exclusively devoted themselves to medicine, and of these, eleven associated themselves with other practitioners, and in many cases fell heir to their practice."

Much might be written about the waste of time and material in the training of 100 men to fill 27 places, leaving the rest to bushwhack for a living. This isn't scientific, nor is it just to the rising generation and to the community at large. The young graduate, fresh from college is confronted by a serious problem. The chances are largely against him, and we wonder that more do not throw their lives away in desperate careers.

The attitdue of many wealthy people, so far as we can see, is very little removed from the Spanish don who, being asked to aid Cervantes; then wretchedly poor, replied: "Heaven forbid that his necessities should be relieved; it is his poverty that makes the world rich." This is the philosophy of competition in full bloom. It is based upon the theory that the average man must be whipped and started into action: while the fact is that the normal condition of humanity is action, and action grows noble and wise as opportunity is manly and just. The world cannot be made rich by the poverty of any class or of any individual, and political economists are beginning to see this.

Woman Suffrage and the Right of Suffrage

From Harper's Weekly.

The argument that voting is a natural right, however, is a dangerous basis of the claim of suffrage, because, if the community may restrict the right at all in the interest of the community, it may restrict the right to the degree which it thinks necessary to secure that interest. A law providing for equag suffrage will be passed whenever the present electorate is convinced that such a law is desirable for the common welfare. The common remark that women will vote whenever they prove that they wish to vote is foolish because that can never be bone. They will vote whenever men think that the common interest will be promoted by their voting. It cannot be assumed that a majority of the late legislature, however courteous to women, were of that opinion.

How Justice is "More Ancient than the Stars."

The most common charge brought against nationalists is that of being innovators, the most common objection stated to there propositions is that they are, to adopt the usual phrase, " untried experiments, " as if, forsooth, there could be such a thing as an experimental which had been tried. To those who have to oppose this sort of argument and objection, we commend these words of James Russell Lowell: Wrong, though its title deeds go back to the days of Sodom, is by nature a thing of yesterday; while the right, of which we became conscious but an hour ago, is more ancient than the stars, and of the essence of heaven."

Have you Weak Lungs?.

If you have, don't wait until the trouble becomes so aggravated that nothing can help you, when you may so easily learn what will be of immediate and permanent benefit,- to you, or any of your friends having pulmonary trouble,—through reading a splendid paper on "The Consumptives' Clime," published in Demorest's Family Magazine for May. This article is handsomely illustrated with numerous views of health resorts and other beautiful places in Colorado, and will interest every robust person, as well as those seeking a a congenial clime. Every member of the family is sure to find something of personal interest in every number of Demorest's Family Magazine, and it is published for only $2 a year' by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 E. 14th St., New York.

Public Policy Demands Coal at Cost.

One of the chief elements in England's industrial and commercial greatness has been her cheap coal. The bill for fuel is the main item in the cost of production by steam power, and the nation with the cheapest coal supply can compete successfully with all others. The United States has larger and richer coal beds than any country on earth, and coal should be cheaper in this country than anywhere else, and would be if private corporations were not permitted to seize upon these fountain heads of national prosperity, and by an artificial restriction of production maintain prices at from twice to three times, and often four times, the cost of production.

This policy, which is of equal magnitude as a moral outrage and an economic folly, should cease. The nation should, without longer delay, take possesion of the coal mines, and, as a matter of high public policy and national economy see to it that the product is furnished at cost.

Protection and Labor Organization.

Free traders in the ranks of labor are apt to mislead their follow with the argument that it is the organization of labor which ensures to the worker better wages and more of the comforts of life in the United States than anywhere else on earth. They seem to overlook the fact that the trade union movement of England is forty to fifty years in advance of the same movement in the Unitd States in everything except the matter of compensation for labor done. The recent shut-down of the mines for the purpose of forcing up the price of coal by restricting the ouput, in which nearly half a million people participated as a unit, is an evidence of the power of the English labor organizations to control their members. And if organization alone could control the price of labor the English workers would be the best paid labor in the world. That it is, on the contrary, among the poorest is too well known to require demonstration here.

There are two things which workingmen in the United States should always keep in mind when considering this question, viz: Protection, by securing him the home market, makes it possible for on employer to pay good wages, and thorough, intelligent organization of the employees will require him to do it. On the other hand, no power can compel the payment of higher wages than the condition of the market will warrant. Organizations might compel the closing of a factory; but Protection and organization must go hand in hand to ensure prosperity to both the employer and employed. England seeks to control the markets of the world for the products of her mills and factories; and she can only do so in proportion as she can undersell her competitors from the other nations. In order that this may be done labor is brought down to the life-line; children are forced into the factories before they can read or write, and the mothers either go into the factories themselves or contribute to the family support by receiving factory work at their miserable homes. The workers do not live; they merely exist, and that, too, in spite of a thorough, intelligent organization of the labor forces. The wage-workers of the United States do not want this condition of affairs here; nor will they permit it. American labor knows what it is to enjoy some of the good things of life, and will not be deprived of that enjoyment without making an effort to retain it. Under Protection labor finds steady employment at remunerative wages; but under free trade the American laborer must inevitably be reduced to the condition of his less fortunate brother across the ocean. Intelligent men in the ranks of labor organizations need only to understand this question to see their path of duty in the right direction.

This we believe to be the right way to look at this question under the competetive system under which we are now living.

"The maintenance of party lines," says Cardinal Gibbons, is an indispensable means for preserving political purity." The warfare between good and evil in this world is incessant, and it is, therefore necessary to have a Democratic as well as a Republican party. If all were Republicans good government would be so well assured that the people would sink into apathy and indifference. While there is a function for the Democratic party to fill, it is, however, important that that party should not grow too large.

Republican Reciprocity Did It.

In 1891, during the eight months ending February 27 the exports of butter from the United States to Cuba amounted in value to $8, 615.

In 1892, under Republican reciprocity, during the corresponding period, our exports of butter to that country amounted in value to $ 18, 629.

This increse of $9, 014 or 191 per cent, was caused by Republican reciprocity.

In 1890, during the twelve months ending March 31, the exports from the United States amounted in value to $42,958,402.

In 1891, during the corresponding period after Republican protection had been in force six months, our exportsa amounted id value to $872, 008, 286..

In 1892, under Republican protection, dnring the whole of the corresponding period, our exports amounted in value to $ 1, 006 284, 206.

This increase in 1891 of $29,049, 884, and in 1892 of $163.326, 104, was caused by Republican protection.

In 1891, during the twelve months ending March 31, the imports of merchandise into the United States amounted in value to 835, 660,364, of which $309, 260, 699, or 37. 01 per cent., were free of duty, and $526, 399, 665 per cent., were duitable.

In 18 92, under Republican protection, during the corresponding period, our imports of merchandise amounted in value to $ 837, 058 of which $551, 473, 523, or 55.12 per cent., were free of duty, and $375, 585, 062, or 4487 per cent were dutiable.

Thus under Republican protection, while our home industries were well protected and while there was an increase of $1,398,221 during the time in question in the total value of our imports of merchandise. yet the amount of such dutiable imports decreased $150, 814 603, or 2212 per cent., and the amount of such free imports increased $152,212,824, or 1812 per cent.

In 1891, during the twelve months ending March 31, the exports of the United States amounted in value to $872,008, 286, and the imports to $ 835, 660, 394.

In 1892, under Republican protection, during the corresponding period, our exports amounted in value to $1.006,284,506, and our imports to $837,058,585.

Thus Republican protection made the excess of our exports over imports in 1892, $ 169,225, 921, as against $36. 347, 922 in 1891.

The Manufacturers of Massachusetts Against the Women and Children.

As usual the textile manufacturers turn up in strength before the Massachusetts Legislature to oppose any reduction of the hours of labor in factories. The woolen manufacturer's association leads the oppositions this year with an elaborate memorial protesting against any relief to the women and little children, who form the bulk of the factory workers, on the ground that a reduction of hours from 60 to 58 per week will place Massachusetts mills at a disadvantage as compared with those of other states. This argument could, or course, be alleged with equal force against almost any proposition to ameliorate the condition of workers whether as to wages, safety devices or hours of labor. If it be admitted to be a valid argument it amounts to making the standard for the regulation of labor the most oppressive system that obtains in any state or community with which that state is in business competition, and puts an end to all possibility of improving the condition of their labor. It means that the factory laws of the most backward state of the union are to be the pattern on which those of Massachusetts should be framed.

The sheer brutality of this line of argument seems particularly glaring in this instance because those against whom it is used are the most helpless and pitiable class of wage workers, the women and children. Men workers in all the prominent trades have obtained or are seeking to obtain a reduction of the hours of labor from ten to nine, and even eight a day, but when it is proposed to reduce the ten-hour day of the woman and child worker in the factories by even the trifle of two hours in the week, the federated manufacturers of that state rise in opposition.

It is about settled in the minds of his friends that D. B. Hill will not get the Democratic nomination for President. What Hill is now asking himself with solicitude is whether there is enough of him left to knock out G. Cleveland.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat says all the "good western men" whom the Democrats are considering are renegade Republicans. On the other hand the ones the Republicans have in view have always been sound Republicans and are yet.

Valerie;

OR,

HALF A TRUTH.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

Something suppressed and constrained in his voice made Valerie's heart turn sick with fear; it crossed her, too, that he had heard her enter the library, and had sought her. Why did he do this? It was cruel!

Still not daring to look at his face, she laid her book on a chair near, and rose.

"Yes," she said, trying to speak carelessly, but hardly succeeding. "I was busy, and I——"

"Are you going to run away from me, is that it?" interrupted Beauregard, laying a light touch on her arm. "Don't do that yet, Fairy Queen. I heard you enter here, and I came—to say—to say good-bye!"

He took her hand in his, folding it closely in both his own, looking down on the lovely face with such agony in his dark eyes, that if she had seen it she must have lost utterly the self-control that his clinging clasp, the pain in his voice, had well-nigh robbed her of,

"It is hard," he said, and his lips paled even as he spoke, "to say good-bye; and it may be perhaps years before we meet again!"

"I suppose it may be!" the girl said, in a mechanical, passionless way; "or perhaps never—that would be best!"

"Why do you say that, Valerie?" said the soldier, almost sternly. "Tell me one thing: you are not going to give yourself to Aston Lawford?"

"No!" she said, suddenly wrenching her hand from his hold. "I have not sunk quite so low as that!"

She made a quick step forward to go, but Beauregard did not move.

"Valerie!" he said, under his breath, forgive me—forgive me!"

The girl stopped, and half turned toward him.

"I have nothing to forgive!" she said, chokingly. "You have always been kind to me, Colonel Beauregard; let me thank you now—and go!"

Still he did not move—did not speak—his face was ashen white; he strove hand to hand, foot to foot, with the passion that was burning in his veins like molten fire—melting even his iron will as iron is melted in the furnace.

Valerie's lips moved; there was no sound, but he saw that they formed the words "Good-bye;" and it needed only this. As she turned away once more Max Beauregard flung himself before her, and caught her in his arms, locking her to his breast in an embrace that left her powerless, even if she had had the will to strive with him, covering her face with passionate, despairing kisses. He had courted temptation, and it had mastered him. In those wild moments everything was forgotten, swept away like gossamer, everything but the love he bore this girl; blotting out the sin he had told her could never be blotted out; wrecking the stern resolve to trample his heart in the dust, rather than to accept a love less pure than he gave. Once before he had tasted the joy, the anguish, of holding to his breast the woman he so worshipped; but then she was unconscious; she knew not that his lips touched her brow, her heart gave no answering throb to his; but now his kisses were pressed not on her brow only, but on warm lips that trembled under his; it was no senseless form he held to him, but one that quivered with the full consciousness of the love enfolding it. Yes, for those few moments even honor was forgotten—honor that should have stood between Max Beauregard and the woman he loved, yet would not make his wife; it was the one irresistible impulse: "I have gone mad—I love you!" and terrible, when it came, was the shock of the revulsion.

Valerie, who had so clearly, by act if not by word, told him the value she set upon a comparatively poor man—who had been ready to sacrifice her youth and beauty for wealth, and cast that, too, aside when the man once despised became a more desirable "match"—it was this Valerie he was holding to his heart with such passion of love, whom he was claiming as his one great earthly treasure.

He loosed his clasp, he put the girl from him, and flung himself into a chair, covering his face.

"Oh, Heaven!" he muttered, hoarsely, "I was mad—mad, Forgive me, Valerie, if you can. I could only remember that I loved you; ay, and I shall love you while I have life—love you beyond the grave!"

But Valerie was blind and dizzy with joy so great that it was almost a terror. Max Beauregard loved her! She knew it now, knew it by his own confession; his clasp, his kiss, if words had been unuttered, had unsealed her lips, had given her the right to break down the barrier between their lives; she could tell him the truth now; Ah! but would he doubt her? She had moved a step toward her lover, but at this unhappy thought she shrank back, sinking into the chair from which she had risen. Her trembling hand stole into her bosom, where her talisman rested; if she showed him this would he not believe?

Beauregard dropped his hands, and, rising, approached Valerie. Her head drooped, the burning color suffused her face. He laid his hand on the back of the chair, and bent down to her, speaking low and brokenly:

"I asked you just now," he said, "to forgive me. I have no right to ask that—I have done you a great wrong, it was madness to seek you; I should have better known my own weakness; and yet——Oh, Valerie!" he said, passionately, "if you could love me for myself alone—if even now—but no! the test is wanting. If I could strip myself of all that dazzled your eyes—if I could be once more what I was, when you unconsciously won my heart from me—then I might know, but now it is too late! You love me; ay, I knew it when I held you this minute in my arms and my lips clung to yours; but not as I love you. Oh! my darling—my life," lower the bright head drooped, the girl's face was hidden in her clasped hands, "if you had been true to yourself, true to the nobler nature you have never wholly crushed; if you had known how I loved you, Valerie, almost from the first, almost from the day I carried you through the rain in my arms! Your image was always with me on the battlefield, in the camp, by day, by night; waking, dreaming, you were with me still. I heard your voice; I felt the touch of your hand; your dear eyes looked into mine, and I grew to hope that those dreams might yet be reality. Your love for Louis Charteris was but a girl's love for a boy. I dared even to dream sometimes that I had perhaps sowed in your heart the seeds of a deep and lasting love. It was happiness to imagine that you sometimes thought of me, sometimes wished for my presence; and when at last I came home, oh! the bitter—bitter awakening! You met me—oh! no, I cannot speak of it!" He turned aside pressing his hand over his eyes. "It is my punishment that I love you with all my strength, ay, though I know that you would have sold yourself to Aston Lawford, and cast him aside for my sake in the very hour that made me owner of the broad lands of Abbot's Leigh."

Now Valerie sprang to her feet and faced him; her eyes met his with clear, fearless gaze; but her lips quivered, her whole form trembled with the passion of emotion that possessed her.

"No!" she said; "you wrong me; you have wronged me from the beginning!"

"Valerie!"

"It was my woman's pride that forced me to seem all that I was not," she went on, not heeding him. "But I may speak now; I may tell you the truth, for I know that you love me; your own lips have told me! Stay! hear me out, and then——" her head drooped, the crimson rose to her brow, her voice faltered; "if you can take me to your heart again——" she broke off abruptly, her hand stole into her breast once more, her voice sank lower, but she spoke passionately, "It was you who taught me what love was, Max; it was you who showed me clearly what I had only felt vaguely, that it was only a sister's love I gave to Louis Charteris. When I rejected his flowers for yours, it was not only because you had been kind to me—I did not know it then—but—but I knew afterward, and I kept those flowers; I have kept them ever since, and a few of them I kept apart—here—always—day and night, on my heart!"

The flush of shame was on her cheek; the last words were scarcely whispered, for though she knew this man loved her now, she had not known it then.

She so loved him even then, so treasured his gift, so wore it on her heart—always! Beauregard had almost obeyed the impulse to clasp her once more in his arms, but he mastered it, setting his teeth. She might have loved him, and yet given heed to ambition.

Valerie went on, not raising her eyes, her hands pressed on her bosom now.

"When you were away in Egypt, my heart was with you; you hoped that I sometimes thought of you. I thought of you always; you liked to imagine that I wished for your presence; I longed to see you again, as a woman can only long to see the man she loves. I treasured every line that was published about you, if only your name was mentioned. I did not know at first that I loved you; I did not think all this was disloyalty to Louis. It was one night, in Paris—that——" she stopped. "No—never mind," she added, hurriedly.

"Go on!" said Beauregard, huskily, still mastering himself. "Go on—tell me all—all!"

Valerie sank into a chair, dropped her clasped hands on a table near; but after a moment's silence she went on, falteringly, with changing color, not once raising her eyes:

"It was one night, when I saw in the evening papers that you had been made Colonel, and I was so happy—so proud! I—I had a picture of you, one I had bought, and I used to look at it often; and that night I went to my desk for it, and there was a letter of Louis' that I had forgotten to answer, and it seemed to startle me, for I had no thought for him, only for you, and I knew then that I loved you. Oh! the shame of it! for I was giving my love unsought. That was why I was so cold to you when you came back; it was my pride; I so feared you would read my secret! If I had been older, wiser, I could have trusted myself better; but I dared not be with you. Oh! the pain I gave you that night broke my heart!" She bowed her face down with a bitter sob. "I turn from you because you were poor!" She sprang to her feet again, pressing her hands to her temples. "No? I would have knelt at your feet and blessed you for one word of love. I would have begged my bread by your side, Max. I would not have accepted a kingdom from any hands but yours!"

CHAPTER XLVIII.

One step, and Beauregard was at Valerie's side, grasping her hands in his.

"In my arms," he said, "your shall tell me the rest, Valerie," as she strove to free herself, "you must come to me!"

"Not yet," she said, under her breath. "Max, let me go!—not yet!"

Beauregard released her, and drew back.

"You think," he said, bitterly, "that I doubt you still? I have deserved this? Ah! fool, and blind that I was to believe you so false!"

"No—no!" cried the girl, clasping her hands, "how could you believe me otherwise? I set myself to deceive you. I let even Louis believe that I broke my word to him for Aston Lawford's sake; I so feared the accusation that I loved you! And it was to keep my secret that I led you to believe I was willing to marry Lawford for his money's sake. For your sake I refused Aston Lawford; ay, but not as you thought, Max—Heaven be my witness! When I sent back to him the answer that refused him, telling him I did not love him—that I could never be his wife—I did not know even that Gerald, your brother, was ill. I wrote that answer soon after Lawford's letter came. I kept it to show aunt Constance first, but when she did not return I sent it. It had left the house half an hour when she came home, and told me Gerald was dangerously ill; she was asking me what answer I had sent to Lawford, for they had told her of his letter to me, when your telegram came. I seemed to you base indeed; why should you not believe even this scathing shame of me? Why, I lent it further countenance when I came here. I knew what aunt Constance wished, and yet I came; I was afraid to defy her in words, it was the old horror of being charged with the truth; and she might have spoken to you! Ah! anything—anything but that, and then—then—I am keeping back nothing, Max, I am laying my heart bare to you—there was happiness, through all the cruel pain, in being with you; but oh! your own heart will speak for me, that I had no part or lot in the wretched scheme that brought me here! In this at least I can prove my truth; Aston Lawford wrote to me a few days ago, asking me again to be his wife. I tore his letter into fragments, and flung them on the floor—that was my answer to him. Then aunt Constance spoke to me plainly. I could win you if I chose, she said; I would not do that, and I would not marry Lawford. No matter in what words; she bade me choose between you and Lawford, or she would wash her hands of me. I told her I would give her my decision to-day, and that day I wrote to uncle Will, and said I was coming back to him. I told aunt Constance to-day that I had made my choice. To-morrow I return to Welford. Max!" her voice faltered and broke now, "I have been wrong and foolish, but I was young and ignorant, and there was no one to guide and counsel me; but it was my love for you, not love of the world, that made me seem false and mercenary. I wronged you, but it was in wronging myself first. Can you believe me, Max?"

"In my arms!" he said.

For answer, Beauregard threw himself at her feet.

"Valerie! Valerie! Oh, Heaven!" he cried, with an agony that shook him like a reed, "how can I atone to you? I might have known—I might have known! But, oh! my darling, even when I believed you unworthy yourself, I could not judge you harshly, I loved you too well. Ah! how my blindness has made you suffer!"

"Max! hush!—hush!" she whispered, laying her trembling hands on the man's bowed head. "I am to blame—I alone. Ah! you were always so kind and tender to me; thinking what you did—what you only could think of me, you were so generous; and you loved me through all! Ah! nothing can take that joy from me—you loved me through all!"

"Loved you! I worshiped you! A hundred times I had been ready to fling everything to the winds, and claim you; but always came the hideous thought that, if you loved me, it was not for myself alone; but now—now," he rose, and once more locked the slight form in passionate embrace, "now," he said, his deep voice trembling, and he drew the golden head back on his breast, and looked down in the dark eyes, that sank beneath the passion of his gaze, "I know that my darling is mine—was mine always—my Fairy Queen—my own, only love!"

Lower he bent, and again their lips met. Dizzy with happiness, the girl clung to her lover; was it a dream that all the shadows were swept away, all the heart-break, all the bitter weeping, the endless pain—that Max held her to his heart, called her his own, kissed her lips, folded her life into his! Ah! she had dreamed of this, but on the dream there was always a shadow; she wept even while his lips pressed hers, but there was no shadow now; it was all glorious sunshine that dazzled by its brightness and made her senses reel.

And when Max spoke again—Heaven knows how long he could only hold the loved form to him, with the rapture those alone can know who have suffered as he had suffered, and kiss the dear face he had never hoped to pillow on his heart!—when he spoke again his voice at first sounded far away, like a voice in a dream; but it was a dream of wondrous light.

"I feel as if I could hold you here forever, my treasure, and never let you leave my arms. Ah! Heaven! to think how nearly I lost you? Yes! cling closer—closer to me dearest; but I could not have parted from you forever, Valerie; always my heart warred against the falsehood you forced upon me. I must have followed you—you knew I loved you, Valerie, before to-day!"

"Yes," she said, softly, "I knew, I tried to put the thought away; but that day, when you would not let Zoe leap the gully——"

"Ah," he said, with a quick-drawn breath, "the mad happiness of that ride! and when you yielded to me, and gave me your dear hand, Fairy Queen, you almost conquered me then! I knew—I felt that your heart was mine, and yet that cruel thought always sealed my lips, that were I stripped of wealth you would not listen to your heart. It is like treason to you to speak of this, and yet I must make confession to ease my conscience," he added, with the old bright, tender smile.

"I have the most to confess, Max," said the girl, wistfully. "Indeed, you have nothing; you spared me what I deserved, or seemed to deserve!"

"Spared you because I loved you, and you but a stripling, cast alone on a brilliant world, a reigning beauty, an idol. Ah! yours was a rare nature not to be spoiled, Valerie, and if I had known you better I should never have doubted you; but how little I knew of you after all!"

He sat down as he spoke, drawing her to his side, and as Valerie nestled to him, he added, softly:

"If I told you that before to-day I had held you in my arms and kissed you, as I do now," bending down, and touching his lips to her brow, "would you forgive me?"

"Forgive you?" she said, coloring deeply; "but—but, Max, when?"

"The day you sprained your ankle—you fainted and I caught you, we were alone, and the temptation was too strong for me; I did not touch your lips, sweetheart, but your brow I kissed many, many times. Am I forgiven?"

"You know you are, Max," the girl whispered, hiding her face. "More than forgiven!"

By-and-by she spoke again, not lifting her head:

"Max, they will say—the world will say—the worst of me—that I have been successful; your sister will say so, too!"

"Let the world say what it will, dearest. I know your heart, and you know mine. Is not that enough?"

"If for you, Max, then for me. I did not care for myself."

"Surely nothing can touch me when I have my Fairy Queen," said the soldier, smiling. "After all, I was right when I said you would admit me to the Fairy Ring!"

"Yes," said Valerie, dreamily, "I thought so often of your saying that!"

"Dearest! Well, you shall hold high revel now under the Enchanted Oak in the Abbot's Glen, if to-morrow is moonlight."

"But I was going to Lord Morton's!" said Valerie, raising herself.

"Faith!" returned Beauregard, coolly, and drawing her into her old position. "We must see about that. I don't feel inclined to spare you. Hist! here comes the riding party. I wish they had lost their way; yet, thank Heaven that we both stayed at home, and both, I think, for the same reason—that it was suffering too great to bear to be with each other so soon before parting; to wear the mask of indifference with breaking hearts. Am I right, Fairy Queen?"

"Yes, Max!"

They heard the party ride up to the terrace-steps, talking and laughing. Beauregard rose, and held the girl to his heart, as if he could not let her go.

"It is so hard," he said, "to release you, but I must; once more, my own!" kissing her lips tenderly; "but I shall see you again soon!"

He released her with an effort, and Valerie fled up to her own dressing-room, Max Beauregard returning to his study.

CHAPTER XLIX.—"MY FAIRY QUEEN."

When the party met at luncheon there was no outward change in anyone; even Mrs. Langley preserved an affable aspect, but Max Beauregard and Valerie could see the thunder-clouds behind the sunshine, and the former smiled to himself as he thought how radiant my lady would feel if she only knew the truth.

After luncheon Valerie could not escape from Lord Westbrook and the others, who spread about the lawn and the gardens; she would rather have been alone, but she was so happy now that there was no need to assume a brightness not felt.

Colonel Beauregard sought Mrs. Langley, who had retired to her boudoir, and when he knocked at the door, was sitting tapping her foot on the floor in a state of extreme perturbation.

Valerie's conduct was simply distracting.

"Colonel Beauregard!" she exclaimed, in great surprise as he entered; "you wish to see Elinor, perhaps?"

"No," said he, coolly. "I wish to see you for a few minutes, if you can spare me the time."

"Of course I can, with pleasure!" she answered, making room for him on the lounge by her side, and more amazed than ever.

"Thanks," said he, seating himself, "and pardon a soldier for going straight to the point. Is Valerie obliged to fulfill this engagement at the Morton's?"

"Colonel Beauregard, I don't understand!"

It was wicked of him, but he could not resist teasing her.

"No?" he said; "well, excuses are sometimes made in these cases, are they not? and if Valerie went back to Welford!"

"And who told you," asked Mrs. Langley, leaning back, "that Valerie was going back to Welford?"

"She told me herself!" returned Beauregard, playing with his moustache.

Mrs. Langley looked at him steadily for a moment before she spoke again; but her scrutiny was not very satisfactory.

"Valerie," she said, coldly, "is impetuous and capricious. She had taken into her head to go to Welford; but I don't know why she need have mentioned it to you!"

"I don't see why she need go!"

"Nor I; it was her own wish!"

"Wish! hardly. If a man jumped into the sea, as an alternative to committing a crime, would you say he wished to be drowned?"

"You talk in riddles," said Mrs. Langley, turning pale, yet with a flash of hope in her heart.

"They are very readable riddles. You have done all you could, Mrs. Langley," he said, laying his hand on hers, and speaking with a certain sternness underlying his gentleness of speech and manner, "to wreck a life that a nature too noble—forgive me—for you to understand saved from moral shipwreck, but could not save from the shipwreck of happiness. You tried to force Valerie, first into a hateful marriage with Aston Lawford; next into trying to win me, when I became a more valuable 'match;' and since she would do neither, you pronounced her a 'failure,' and practically gave her the choice of these two alternatives, or banishment from your care and favor. You were worldly wise—very worldly wise, and yet you never discovered what a truer wisdom might have found out without any worldly knowledge—the mainspring of all Valerie's conduct."

Mrs. Langley had sat gazing stonily at the speaker, too utterly taken aback to resent the accusation, which, put plainly and tersely, looked very ugly indeed, and yet was so true; as he paused, and she did not speak, he added, with a half smile—in his heart he almost pitied the woman—"I suppose you know it now?"

"Colonel Beauregard, do you mean——?"

"I mean," he said—and what a light flashed up into his dark eyes!—"that Valerie's heart was given to me before she went to live under your roof, though she did not know it then; and when she knew it, all her life was given to the task of hiding her secret. She hid it from you, and she hid it from me until to-day. So, after all, you have your wish, though not as you had planned it, but because I learned the truth, that Valerie loved me for myself,—would have given herself to me if I had asked her love—when I was only a younger son, with a younger son's allowance and a soldier's pay!"

IGNORANCE IS BLISS.

The splendid steamship Adamant, of the celebrated Cross Bow Line, left New York on her February trip under favorable auspices. There had just been a storm on the ocean, so there was every chance that she would reach Liverpool before the next one was due.

Capt. William Jones had a little social problem to solve at the outset, but he smoothed that out with the tact which is characteristic of him. Two Washington ladies—official ladies—were on board, and the captain, old British sea dog as he was, always had trouble in the matter of precedence with Washington ladies. Capt. Jones never had any bother with the British aristocracy, because precedence is all set down in the bulky volume of "Burke's Peerage," which the captain kept in his cabin, and so there was no difficulty. But a Republican country is supposed not to meddle with precedence. It wouldn't either, if it weren't for the women.

So it happened that Mrs. Assistant-Attorney-to-the-Senate Brownrig came to the Steward and said that, ranking all others on board, she must sit at the right hand of the captain. Afterwards Mrs. Second-Adjutant-to-the-War-Department Digby came to the same perplexed official and said she must sit at the captain's right hand because in Washington she took precedence over every one else on board. The bewildered steward confided his woes to the captain, and the captain said he would attend to the matter. So he put Mrs. War-Department on his right hand and then walked down the deck with Mrs. Assistant-Attorney and said to her:

"I want to ask a favor, Mrs. Brownrig. Unfortunately I am a little deaf in the right ear, caused, I presume, by listening so much with that ear to the fog-horn year in and year out. Now, I always place the lady whose conversation I wish most to enjoy at my left hand at table. Would you oblige me by taking that seat this voyage? I have heard of you, you see, Mrs. Brownrig, although you have never crossed with me before."

"Why, certainly, captain," replied Mrs. Brownrig; "I feel especially complimented."

"And I assure you, madam," said the polite captain, "that I would not for the world miss a single word that," etc.

And thus it was all amicably arranged between the two ladies. All this has nothing whatever to do with the story. It is merely an incident given to show what a born diplomat Capt. Jones was and is to this day.

I don't know any captain who was more popular with the ladies than he, and beside he was as good a sailor as crosses the ocean.

We may say, however, that while this was after he left the English naval service; It was before he came to Bellefonte where he has resided now, for more than twenty years; and where he is known to our people as a just and upright man, square and exact in all his dealings.

But to return to our story. As day by day went on and the good ship plowed her way toward the East, the passengers were unanimous in saying that they never had a pleasanter voyage for that time of the year. It was so warm on deck that many steamer chairs were out, and below it was so mild that a person might think he was journeying in the tropics. Yet they left New York in a snow storm with the thermometer away below zero.

"Such," said young Spinner, who knew everything, "such is the influence of the Gulf Stream."

Nevertheless when Capt. Jones came down to lunch the fourth day out his face was haggard and his look furtive and anxious.

"Why, captain," cried Mrs. Assistant-Attorney, "you look as if you hadn't slept a wink last night."

"I slept very well, thank you, madam," replied the captain. "I always do."

"Well, I hope your room was more comfortable than mine. It seemed to me too hot for anything. Didn't you find it so, Mrs. Digby?"

"I thought it very nice," replied the lady at the captain's right, who generally found it necessary to take an opposite view from the lady at the left.

"You see, said the captain, "we have many delicate women and children on board and it is necessary to keep up the temperature. Still, perhaps the man who attends to the steam rather overdoes it. I will speak to him."

Then the captain pushed from him his untasted food and went upon the bridge, casting his eyes aloft at the signal waving from the masthead, silently calling for help to all the empty horizon.

"Nothing in sight, Johnson?" said the captain.

"Not a speck, sir."

The captain swept the circular line of sea and sky with his glasses, then laid them down with a sigh.

"We ought to raise something this afternoon, sir," said Johnson; "we are right in their track, sir. The Fluda ought to be somewhat about."

"We are too far north for the Fluda, I am afraid," answered the captain.

"Well sir, we should see the Vulcan before night sir. She's had good weather from Queenstown."

"Yes, Keep a sharp lookout, Johnson."

"Yes, sir."

The captain moodily paced the bridge with his head down.

"I ought to have turned back to New York," he said to himself.

Then he went down to his own room, avoiding the passengers as much as he could, and had the steward bring him some beef tea. Even a captain cannot live on anxiety.

"Steamer off the port bow, sir," rang out the voice of the lookout at the prow. The man had sharp eyes, for a lan dsman could have seen nothing.

"Run and tell the captain," cried Johnson to the sailor at his elbow, but as the sailor turned the captain's head appeared up the stairway. He seized the glass and looked long at a single point in the horizon.

"It must be the Vulcan," he said at last.

"I think so, sir."

"Turn your wheel a few points to port and bear down on her."

Johnson gave the necessary order and the great ship veered around.

"Hello!" cried Spinner, on deck. "Here's a steamer. I found her. She's mine."

Then there was a rush to the side of the ship. "steamer in sight," was the cry, and all books and magazines at once lost interest. Even the placid, dignified Englishman who was so uncommunicative rose from his chair and sent his servant for his binoculars. Children were held up and told to be careful while they tried to see the dim line of smoke so far ahead.

"Talk about lane routs at sea," cried young Spinner, the knowing. "Bosh, I say. See! we're going directly for her. Think what it might be in a fog! Lane routes! Pure luck, I call it."

"Will we signal to her, Mr. Spinner?" gently asked the young lady from Boston.

"Oh, certainly," answered young Spinner. "See, there's our signal flying from the masthead now. That shows them what line we belong to."

"Dear me, how interesting," said the young lady. "You have crossed many times, I suppose, Mr. Spinner."

The room's in disorder,
The cat's on the table,
The flower-stand upset, and the mischief to pay:
And Johnny is screaming
As loud as he's able,
For nothing goes right when mamma's away.

What a scene of discomfort and confusion home would be if mamma did not return. If your wife is slowly breaking down, from a combination of domestic cares and female disorders, make it your first business to restore her health. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is without a peer as a remedy for feeble and debilitated women, and is the only medicine for the class of maladies known as "female diseases" which is sold, by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers that it will give satisfaction, in every case, or the money will be refunded. It is a positive cure for the most complicated cases. It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, and a soothing and strengthening nervine, imparting tone and vigor to the whole system. It's a legitimate medicine, too—carefully compounded by an experienced physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

HE Missed his Opportunity! DON'T Miss Yours, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing! Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, preeminence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. The GOLDEN opportunity for many is here. Money to be made rapidly and honorably by any industrious person of either sex. All ages. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are. Even beginners are easily earning from $5 to $10 per day. You can do as well if you will work, not too hard, but industriously; and you can increase your income as you go on. You can give spare time only, or all your time to the work. Easy to learn. Capital not required. We start you. All is comparatively new and really wonderful. We instruct and show you how, free. Failure unknown among our workers. No room to explain here. Write and learn all free, by return mail. Unwise to delay. Address at once, H. Hallett & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.—A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full terms address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

Price, $1.00 a package. With every $5 order we give a written guarantee to cure or refund money. By mail to any address. PIVER'S REMEDY CO., Toledo, O.

Would you rather buy lamp-chimneys, one a week the year round, or one that lasts till some accident breaks it?

Common glass may break or not the minute you light your lamp; if not, the first draft may break it; if not, it may break from a mere whim.

Tough glass chimneys, Macbeth's "Pearl-top" or "Pearl-glass," almost never break from heat, not one in a hundred.

Where can you get it? and what does it cost?

Your dealer knows where and how much. It costs more than common glass; and may be, he thinks tough glass isn't good for his business.

The plague of breaking lamp-chimneys is abroad in the land.

There are two sorts of chimneys; brittle and tough. Ninety-nine in a hundred are brittle. The worst are imported from Germany. The best are Macbeth's "Pearl-top" & "Pearl-glass."

Two sorts as to workmanship; fine and coarse. The fine are Macbeth's "Pearl-top" and "Pearl-glass." The coarse are rough and out of proportion; misfits and misshapen; they do not make a good draft; they smoke.

Two sorts as to glass; transparent and gray. "Pearl-top" and "Pearl-glass" are clear, fine and tough—not tough against accident—tough against heat.

Call for "Pearl-top" or "Pearl-glass" chimneys.

Council Proceeding.

The Borough Council met last Monday evening at the usual hour, president William Hillibish in the chair. There were five members present.

The street committee reported work cleaning streets progressing satisfactorily. That A. G. Morris would furnish stone for use of Borough on streets at 50 cents per gross ton, which was cheaper than they could be got elsewhere and that stone were needed at once.

The Water committee reported work done on pipes throughout town and that there were nineteen big leaks in the pipes in different places. That Samuel Cherry who lives on Valentine street refused to pay his water tax; the committee were authorized to cut off the supply and let Samuel go dry or drink beer until he paid up. That there was sixty dollars of tax due on porerty known as brick row in north part of the town owned by Spangler and Gephart. It was voted that these delinquent could have water to drink and keep themselves clean for a while longer but that their case should be turned over to Clem Dale borough solicitor. That the water was running to waste at the tank of the Penna. R. R. Co. The council instructed the committee to have the waste stopped.

The Fire and Police committee reported that the hose belonging to the Logans was in bad condition. That there was not over five hundred feet of good hose in the borough. That new uniforms should be purchased for the police. It was voted that the new clothes be bought and that the color be blue. It was stated that the old stone stable used last year for a pound could be had again. It was voted to hire it.

The citizens out by the car works refuse to pay taxes unless they get a board walk. It was promised again that some action should be taken in the near future.

Cal Pifer, who lives on the east side of Pike alley, wants an electric light as he claims he is afraid to go home at night it is so dark; there are seven or eight families in this locality that want more light as well as Cal. This matter was refered to street committee and that probably will be the last of it. The idea? an electric light on Pike alley.

IGNORANCE IS BLISS

"Oh, I know my way about," answerd the modest Spinner.

Tht captain kept the glasses glued to his eye. Suddenly he almost let them drop.

"My God! Johnson," he cried.

What is it sir?"

She's flying a signal of distress, too!"

The two steamers slowly approached each other and when nearly alongside and about a mile apart the bell of the Adamant rang to stop.

"There, you see," said young Spinner to the Boston Girl, "she is flying the same flag at her mast head that we are."

"Then she belongs to the same line as this boat?"

"Oh, certainly," answered Mr. Cock-Sure Spinner.

"Oh, look! look! look!" cried the enthusiastic Indianapolas girl who was going to take music in Germany.

Everyone looked aloft and saw running up to the masthead a long line of fluttering, many-colored flags. They remained in place for a few moments and then fluttered down again, only to give place to a different string. The same thing was going on on the other steamer.

"How just too interesting for anything" said Mrs. Assistant. "I am just dying to know what it all means. I have read of it so often but never saw it before. I wonder when the captain will come down. What does it all mean? she asked the deck steward.

"They are signaling to each other madam."

"Oh, I know that· But what are they signaling?"

"I don't know, madam."

"Oh, see! see!" cried the Indianapolis girl, clapping her hand with delight. "The other steamer is turning around."

It was indeed so. The great ship was thrashing the water with her screw, and gradually the masts came in line and then her prow faced the east again. When this had been slowly accomplished the bell on the Adamont rang full speed ahead and then the captain came slowly down the ladder that led from the bridge.

"Oh, captain, what does it all mean?"

"Is she going back, captain? Nothing wrong, I hope."

"What ship is it, captain?"

"She belongs to our line, doesn't she?"

Why is she going back?"

"The ship," said the captain slowly, "is the Vulcan, of the Black Bowling Line, which left Queenstown shortly after we left New York. She has met with an accident. Ran into some wreckage, it is thought, from the rcent storm. Anyhow there is a hole in her, and whether she sees Queenstown or not will depend a great deal on what weather we have and whether her bulkheads hold out. We will stand by her till we reach Queenstown."

"Are there many on board, do you think, captain?"

"There are thirty-seven cabin passengers and over 800 steerage passengers," answered the captain.

"Why don't you take them on board, out of danger, captain?"

"Ah, madam, there is no need to do that. It would delay us, and time is everything in a case like this. Besides, they will have ample warning if she is going down, and they will have time to get everybody in the boats. We will stand by them you know."

"Oh, the poor creatures," cried the sympathetic Mrs. Second-Adjutant. Think of their awful position. May be engulfed at any moment, I suppose they are all on their knees in the cabin. How thankful they must have been to see the Adamant."

On all sides there was the profoundest sympathy for the unfortunate passengers of the Vulcan. Cheeks paled at the very thought of the catastrophe that might take place at any moment within their own sight. It was a realistic object lesson on the everpresent dangers of the sea. While those on deck looked with new interest at the steamship plunging along within a mile of them, the captain slipped away to his room. As he sat there there was a tap at his door.

"Come in," shouted the captain.

The silent Englishman slowly entered.

"What's wrong, captain," he asked.

"Oh, the Vulcan has had a hole stove in her and I signal——"

Yes, I know all that, of course, but what's wrong with us?"

"With us?" echoed the captain blankly.

"Yes, with the Adamant? What has been amiss for the last two or three days? I'm not a talker, nor am I afraid any more than you are, but I want to know."

"Certainly," said the captain.

"Please shut the door, Sir John."

* * * * *

Meanwhile there was a lively row aboard the Vulcan. In the saloon Captain Flint was standing at a bay with his knuckles on the table,

"Now what the devil's the meaning of all this?" cried Adam K. Vincent, member of Congress.

A crowd of frightened women were standing around, many on the verge of hysterics. Children cling with pale faces to their mother's skirts, fearing they knew not what. Men were grouped with anxious faces, and the bluff old captain fronted them all.

"The meaning of all what, sir?

"You know very well. What is the meaning of our turning round?"

"It means, sir, that the Adamant has eighty-five saloon passengers and nearly 500 intermediate and steerage passengers who are in the most deadly danger. The cotton in the hold is on fire, and they have been fighting it night and day. It may break out at any moment. It means then, sir, the Vulcan is going to stand by the Adamant.

A wail of anguish burst from the frightened women at the awful fate that might be in store for so many human beings so near them, and they clung closer to their children and thanked God that no such danger threatened them and those dear to them.

"And dammit, sir," cried the Congressman, "do you mean to tell us that we have to go against our will—without even be ing consulted—back to Queenstown?"

"I mean to tell you so, sir."

"Well, by the gods, that's an outrage, and I won't stand it, sir." I must be in New York by the 27th. I won't stand it, sir."

"I am very sorry, sir, that anybody should be delayed."

"Delayed? Hang it all, why don't you take the people on board and take 'em to New York? I protested against this. I'll bring a lawsuit against the company, sir."

"Mr. Vincent," said the captain sternly "permit me to remind you that I am captain of this ship. Good afternoon, sir."

The Congressman departed from the saloon exceeding wroth, breathing dire threats of legal proceedings against the line and against the captain personally, but most of the passengers agreed that it would be an inhuman thing to leave the Adamant alone in midocean in such terrible straits.

"Why didn't they turn back, Capt. Flint?" asken Mrs. Gen. Weller.·

"Because, madame, every moment is of value in such a case, and, and we are nearer Queenstown than we are New York."

And so the two steamships, side by side worried their way toward the East, always within sight of each other and with the rows of tights of each visible at night to the sympathetic souls on the other. The sweltering men poured water into the hold of the one and the pounding pumps poured water out of the hold of the other and thus they reached Queenstown.

* * * * *

On board the tender that took the passengers ashore at Queenstown from both steamers two astonished women met each other.

"Why! Mrs.—Gen·—Curtin! You don't mean to say that you were on board that unfortunate Vulcan."

"For the lands sake, Mrs. Assistant Brownrig. Is that really you? Will wonders never cease? Unfortunate, did you say? Mighty fortunate for you, I think. Why! weren't you just frightened to death?"

"I was, but I had no idea any one I knew was on board."

"Well, you were on board yourself. That would have been enough to have killed me."

"On board myself? Why, what do you mean? I wasn't on board the Vulcan. Did you get any sleep at all after you knew you might go down at any moment?"

"My sakes, Jane, what are you talking about? Down at any moment, or, worse still, have been burnt to death if the fire had got ahead of them. You don't mean to say you didn't know the Adamant was on fire the most of the way across?"

Mrs.—General—Curtin. There's some horrible mistake. It was the Vulcan. Everything depended on her bulkheads, the captain said. There was a hole as big as a barn door in the Vulcan. The pumps were going night and day."

Mrs. General looked at Mrs. Assistant as the light began to dawn on both of them.

"Then it wasen't the engines, but the pumps," she said:

"And it wasn,t the steam, but the fire," screamed Mrs. Assistant. "Oh, dear how that captain lied, and I thought him such a nice man, too. Oh, I shall go into hysterics, I know I shall.

"I wouldn't if I were you," said the sensible Mrs. General, who was a strong-minded woman; "besides, it is too late. We're all safe now. I think both captains were pretty sensible men. Evidently married, both of 'em."

Which was quite true, of one, but not of Capt. William Jones, who was not married for some time afterwards.

Safety in the Midst of Danger.

This would seem a contradiction—is so, in fact, to the eye. But experience has proved its possibility. Take the case of the individual who dwells in a malarious region. A robust constitution is no certain defence against the dreaded chills. What is? Recorded testimony, covering a period little short of half a century, proves that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is precisely this. This continent does not limit the field where the medicine has proved its efficacy. In South America, the Isthmus of Panama, Mexico, everywhere in fact where miasma-born disease takes on its most obstinate and formidable types, the Bitters is a recognized specific in illimitable demand, and prescribed by physicians of repute. Potent, too, is it in disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, and against that destroyer, lagrippe. It improves appetite and sleep, neutralizes rheumatism and kidney complaint.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED.

By local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

THE PRESS has also the best of correspondents in all the great cities of the United States, as well as financial and railroad experts in Chicago and the West, who keep the paper more than abreast with events.

The colums of the SUNDAY PRESS are enriched by contributions from those whose names are written high in our lists of great authors, novelists, essayists, as well as men of high rank in public life. The best authors know that their best audiences are the readers of the DAILY, SUNDAY, and WEEKLY PRESS.

In politics THE PRESS knows no other master than the people and the past year has seen, as has been seen before, the marked fact that it is subservient to no political boss. It has no political ambitions to foster but looks after the interests of its readers, and delivers itself upon the issues of the day in a manner both frank and fearless, letting the facts speak for themselves, and evading no issues but meeting them on the basis of fair play to all men at all times. Its pages know no distinctions and the rights of one class over another are neither recognized nor supported.

"Please, sir," this is for you, and there's tuppence charge, which I gave it to the postman myself."

He recognized the superscription at once. It was from Brooklyn, and ran as follows:

"My Dear Harry: Your letters have such a cerulean hue that they give me the blues. If you allude to 'expenses' again, except to ask for increased subsidies, I shall be angry in earnest. Make haste slowly, remembering that every day spent with such men as you are meeting is qualifying you more highly for my services, and I look upon its cost as a wise investment. Come home, indeed! Well, to make a clean breast of it, I don't want you. You would be de trop. young man, for I am garnishing my house for company. I shall not tell you who my guests will be for I am not quite sure of them.

"I THINK, HARDCASTLE, I MIGHT VENTURE ON AN EXAMINATION."

"Now, before I forget it, let me give you a hint. There is living in a little cottage on Hempstead Heath, an old man, who might be extremely useful to you, one Matthew Forrester, a doctor of law and member of four-fifths of the literary associations of Europe—and, between you and me, as prosy an old dry-as-dust as ever afflicted society. His forte is peculiar. For years he has dug among the garbage of ages and raked up scandals of great families. Sir Bernard Burke got most of his data for 'The Romance of the Aristocracy' from this learned literary scavenger. I inclose a letter of introduction. Tell him Miss Arlington's story; it might awaken reminiscences. I also send herewith a draft; and, talking of drafts, let me advise you to hunt up one Hugh McAllister, who keeps the Knights' Hospitallern tavern in St. John's wood, and tell him from me to give you a bowl of his glenlivet punch; it will be a revelation to to you.

"Your faithful friend,
"ALEXANDER HARDCASTLE."

It is necessary here to give the reader a little clearer insight into Mr. Hardcastle's movements than that gentleman has accorded to Harry.

After his extraordinary interview with Wanda Arlington, when the possibility of his securing the hand of Mrs. Evesham had been broached and discussed, he had shrunk like a bashful schoolgirl from all further allusion to the delicate subject, though he had delayed the day of his departure. Now it happened that this procrastination was fraught with extraordinary events, for he read one morning in the Detroit Free Press, which he assuredly never would have done if he had returned home when he first intended, that Dr. Isaac Jacobson, the distinguished New York oculist, was visiting the great lakes.

"By Jove!" cried Mr. Hardcastle, excitedly. "We must intercept him at Detroit and bring him to see George Arundel."

White and trembling, Kate Evesham caught the tenor of his words.

"Oh, Mr. Hardcastle!" she gasped. "You do not think there is a hope that George—that Mr. Arundel may recover his sight?"

"I know nothing at all about it, my dear," was the grave reply, "but Jacobson is a wonderful man with a great reputation, and with the help of you ladies I'm going to give the lad the benefit of the chance."

"But perhaps he will not care to undertake any professional duties on a pleasure trip," Mrs. Evesham hazarded.

"He is an old friend of mine," Mr. Hardcastle said, simply, "and I will manage all that. The only thing that troubles me is how to bring about an interview without arousing hopes in Arundel's mind which may never be fulfilled."

"Suppose you invited him here to spend the day and asked Mr. Arundel to meet him," Wanda suggested.

"Spoken like a sphinx, young lady. That shall be our plan."

So the great man came and the blind man sat beside him at the dinner table.

"I think, Hardcastle, I might venture on an examination," Dr. Jacobson whispered to his host as they repaired to the sitting-room.

And the examination was made, and the oculist said that if George Arundel was placed under his immediate care for the next few months after his return to New York he felt justified in promising him, at any rate, partial restoration of vision.

Then you may be sure there was great rejoicing at the Evesham cottage. The most composed among them was George Arundel, who bore his congratulations with a quiet gratitude that was irresistibly touching.

Then, when the great man was gone, nothing must do but Mr. Hardcastle himself must bear the tidings to William Bladon.

He found that worthy as usual, indulging in his evening smoke in the orchard. For the last few days there had been a marked coolness between these fine old fellows. Of course, Bladon had treated his young master's friend with marked respect, but they had evidently avoided each other.

Mr. Hardcastle's face was beaming with gratification.

"Bladon," he said cheerily, "I called you the other day a cross-grained old sinner, and I don't take back the expression, but I know how attached you are to Mr. Arundel, and I couldn't help coming to tell you some grand and glorious news."

"Of Master George, sir?"

"Yes, of Master George."

Bladon looked by no means elated.

"I suppose thee 'rt going to say, sir, as the bonnie young lady has let herself be persuaded to wear a gold ring on her pretty finger."

"I was not going to say any such thing, you obstinate old reprobate. Indeed I'd a good mind not to tell you anything at all about it for your perversity."

Then Bladon's eyes twinkled. "Ah," he chuckled, "I see what thee meanest. Good news o' Master Harry! Why, thou'st come to tell me that this other lass, Miss Kate, is bespoke, an' that she can't be, after all, nothing more nor a sister to him."

Mr. Hardcastle did not lose his patience, but simply turned on Bladon and said:

"What would you say, man, if I told you that George Arundel was going to regain the use of his eyes?"

"I should say that thou wert making game of me."

"But it is true," Mr. Hardcastle cried excitedly. "Oh! it is true! Jacobson, the great oculist, has seen him, and pronounced his blindness curable."

Then in a torrent of joyful words he poured forth the whole story into the ears of the wondering old servant.

When he had finished Bladon's eyes were full of tears and his chest heaved with suppressed emotion.

"Now thank the Lord for His mercy," were all the words he could utter.

When the excitement had somewhat subsided, Mr. Hardcastle continued:

"You must bring Mr. Arundel to my house in Brooklyn. If it is possible I shall persuade the ladies to come, too; for our hopes lie in keeping the patient in a cheerful frame of mind; and I am convinced that their presence will tend largely to his recovery."

Bladon frowned. He did not dare to speak, realizing as he did the debt of obligation he owed this grand old man.

Thus it befell that Mr. Hardcastle returned home with the promise that in a couple of weeks Mr. Arundel and his faithful servant would follow him and make their home under his hospitable roof.

Then the genial old gentleman wrote to each of the ladies imploring them to sacrifice their summer happiness to George Arundel's interest and be guests of his until the result of the operation was known.

"Of course we will go," Wanda cried with flashing eyes.

"We might be of service to poor Mr. Arundel," Kate confessed with blushing cheeks.

Mrs. Evesham hesitated. She did not think it was quite proper to invade a bachelor's residence in this matter.

"Oh, mamma," Kate laughed: "To even hint at such a thing at his time of life."

"Really, Kate, you speak of Mr. Hardcastle as if he was a patriarch. I am sure to hear him talk you quite forget his years, which after all are not so many," Mrs. Evesham corrected; whereupon Miss Wanda smiled mischievously and said Kate ought to be ashamed of herself. That remark of Mrs. Evesham was exceedingly gratifying to the young lady, especially as it was followed by a decision to accept the proffered hospitality.

CHAPTER XVIII.
NEARER.

Harry did not let the grass grow under his feet, when there was even the faintest chance of working in the right direction, and half an hour after he received Mr. Hardcastle's letter found him on the top of an omnibus on his way to Hampstead Heath.

He had no difficulty in finding Acacia cottage, the residence of the eccentric doctor, for he was a well-known personage in the neighborhood.

What a pretty place it was. A quaint, thatched house, half smothered in roses and honeysuckles, and surrounded by a lovely garden. The old gentleman himself was in the garden, pruning a rose-bush, a short, weazened, crafty-looking old fellow, clad in a long dressing-gown, and with a Turkish smoking-cap on his head. Such a man living in such a place was to Harry's mind like binding a copy of some black-letter folio in the gay cover of a Christmas annual.

He advanced to meet the intruder.

"Ah, an American," he said, as he glanced at the young man's card before opening the letter of introduction. "Come for some hints I suppose for New York correspondence—some dainty little bit of modern contemporaneous history—grand people yours—do so appreciate gossip about the aristocracy, especially if it has a flavor of naughtiness—not, of course, that I ever indulge in scandal."

By this time he had opened the letter and read its contents.

"What!" he cried, in pleased surprise, "from my old and distinguished acquaintance, Alexander Hardcastle! Gad, I took you for one of those newspaper fellows."

If report was true Dr. Forrester added many an honest guinea to his yearly income in consideration of his salacious gossip with those same correspondents he alluded to so slightingly.

"So Hardcastle wants me to be of service to you, young man. Now, in any way you can command me, I am yours."

He shook Harry's hand warmly, and led him into a charming room, opening into the lawn.

"Take that arm-chair," he said, hospitably. "It is a relic of Stowe abbey. I bought it at the duke's sale; but it will be none the less comfortable for that. You smoke, of course. All Americans do. Have a cigar, and pardon me if I light my pipe."

Harry wondered where he got the magnificent meerschaum with its big amber mouthpiece and solid silver mountings from. He felt sure it was a memento of some decayed fortunes.

"Now, sir, what can I do for you?"

Harry thought a moment; then resolved to tell his story from first to last. He had told it so often that it had now assumed a logical consecutive narrative, without the suppression of a single salient point.

The little old man sat with his head on one side like a jackdaw, grinning with intense interest, but never interrupting by a single movement or exclamation.

At last the tale was told. Still the doctor sat silently puffing at his pipe.

"Do you see any ray of light?" Harry asked at last, anxiously.

"Ray! The whole dawn of day breaks upon me. I see the key to a mystery which has puzzled me for years."

As he spoke he went to his bookshelf, took down a massive volume, carefully dusted it, rapidly turned over its leaves and, having found what he was searching for, placed the ponderous tome on the table in front of Harry and said:

"Read! Your eyes are younger than mine. Read it aloud."

Evesham saw at a glance that the volume was "Burke's Peerage," and at once proceeded to do as he was bid, at first listlessly, then with rapidly increasing interest.

"ARLINGTON, EARL OF (Sir George Arundel.) Baron Arundel of the peerage of England; and a baronet; late Capt. Royal Horse guards Blue; of Willington Hall, Derbyshire, Torbay castle, Devonshire; and 107 Park place, London. b. May 1, 1808, succeed his father as 10th earl, August 2, 1829; m. June 17, 1830, Lady Mary Arabella Eugenia Cecilia dau. of Phillip, Sixth Earl of Newton Solney, who d. December 10, 1832, leaving issue Ambrose, b. July 3, 1831. Title of courtesy, Lord Arundel.

"His lordship married secondly Wanda Vincent, dau. of Julius Augustus Vincent, Esquire, May 20, 1853, by whom he had issue George Archibald, b. April 16, 1854, and Wanda, b. October 11, 1856."

"And do you think, Dr. Forrester, that the Wanda named here is our Wanda?" Harry asked with his lips trembling with excitement.

"Think! Why, man, I am sure of it." Dr. Forrester ejaculated, sweeping the air with his pipe. "Perhaps you never had the honor of meeting his lordship the Earl of Arlington?"

"Not I, indeed."

"Well, if you had, you would not perhaps be so surprised."

"You knew him, then?"

"I know his history. You see before you, sir, a man who is a walking-encyclopedia of information about the great families of England. It has been a remunerative—I would say, an interesting study."

"And about this lord? Oh, pray proceed, sir. I am burning with curiosity."

"Well, you have told me one good story, it is but fair that I should return the compliment. First let me fill my pipe, for I, like my poor friend Thackeray, am a man who can talk and smoke at the same time."

Harry thought he never would begin. At last he commenced:

"Lord Arlington always was a mauvais sujet. As a boy he was always up to tricks—I knew his tutor well, the present dean of Stockton regis. By-the-by you ought to know the dean. I am sure Mr. Hardcastle would like you to meet him before you—"

"Oh, please keep to your story, doctor," Harry pleaded.

"Well, my lord went into the horse guards, but he did not stay there very long, for he was requested to resign for a series of misdemeanors, which in a man, who had not strawberry leaves on his brow, would have insured his being cashiered. Then he married Lord Newton Solney's daughter, about whose death there was considerable scandal. Perhaps you read about it?"

"No," Harry smiled. "I don't think I was born when it occurred, if Burke is accurate."

"True, I had forgotten. I never could quite get to the bottom of that affair—not that I was likely to do so; for if there is a man who hates scandal it is myself."

"And Lord Arlington, sir?"

"Well, after her ladyship's death, he kind of sobered up for awhile—I believe that is an American expression, but it is very forcible—and led a respectable life till he was forty years of age, when he startled society by running away with Miss Wanda Vincent, of Drury Lane theater, whose real name I think was Peggy O'Rourke, but I cannot positively say."

"Burke says she was the daughter of Julius Augustus Vincent, esquire," Harry corrected.

"Ah, a mere fiction, my boy. Of course he treated her shamefully; but she was in the end too much for him; and, twenty years ago, he ran away from her. I don't believe she has ever heard from him since."

"How strange."

"Yes, and the brutality of it was, that he carried off with him her little boy—you see the Lady Wanda was not born till after he disappeared."

HE SAT GLOWERING ON HIS GUEST IN VIRTUOUS SILENCE.

"And I suppose his son by his first wife reigned in his stead."

"Not a bit of it," Dr. Forrester snapped, "for he disappeared several months before his father."

"And never returned?"

"Never! It was supposed that he was killed in some hunting expedition in India; for he was the nimrod of the family, and had acquired quite a reputation for his fool-hardy adventures."

But it was not of Lord Arundel that Harry had come to talk.

"Did you ever see this last Lady Arlington, doctor?" he asked.

"Many times."

"Was she a handsome woman?"

"You shall judge for yourself," was the prompt reply, "for here is her photograph."

As he spoke he handed Harry the picture.

He stood gazing at it, struck dumb with amazement; for there before him was the most perfect likeness of the idol of his heart—his darling Wanda.

"Ah," Forrester exclaimed, "you are captivated. It is rather a good picture of her, taken at her best, when in my opinion she was the prettiest woman in Europe."

"Where is she living now?" Harry asked, trying to conceal his emotion.

"At Willington hall in Derbyshire. For some years she has been a confirmed invalid and sees none but a confidential friend who shares her retirement."

"A lady?"

"Why, no, a gentleman; but Lady Arlington's life is above the breath of suspicion. Paul Hayter has been a lifelong friend and is about the last man in the world you would associate with a scandal."

"Oh, I was not even hinting at such a thing, but how on earth can this throw any light on the antecedents of my young friend, for you see it was a boy, not a girl, which Lord Arlington abducted."

"Wait a moment," Dr. Forrester continued, "you are more than half in the dark yet; for see, when the earl disappeared with the poor woman's little boy, meaning, I don't doubt, to break her heart, she gave birth in less than three months after his departure to a little girl—the Wanda mentioned here. Now, when this little thing was two years old she was stolen as everybody believed by one of the earl's emissaries, and has never been heard of since, till you bring me news of her to-day."

"You speak very confidently."

"I am confident. And, to show you how assured I am, let me inform you that I mean to start for Willington hall to-morrow morning."

"You do!" Harry could not help saying. "Why, what business can it possibly be of yours? I mean—" he stammered, "it seems a good deal of trouble for you to undertake, does it not, Dr. Forrester?"

"Trouble!" cried the doctor, excitedly. "Do you think I consider anything a trouble which helps me to unlock the skeleton cupboard of a great family? Besides," he continued, while his eyes gleamed cunningly, "there is always a profitable aspect in literary explorations of this character."

"Sir!"

"Why," cried the doctor, rubbing his hands, "the steward of the richman's estate is a fortunate fellow; but the steward of his secrets is a plutocrat."

"You mean that you would—"

"Interview Lady Arlington—it might be worth—"

"Sir!" Harry broke forth, spiritedly, "in my country the man who trades on women's secrets is accounted but a very sorry fellow. Why, I'm not going to blackmail Lady Arlington!"

"Nor I, either. Don't put on any of these confounded republican airs with me, sir, for I'm not the man to stand it."

For a time he sat glowering on his guest in virtuous silence. Suddenly his brow cleared.

"Bah, how foolish we are to quarrel," he said, with a forced smile, "for our interests are the same. Each can do nothing without the other."

"I do not quite see how you are necessary to the furtherance of my projects," Harry declared.

"Do you not, indeed?" the doctor sneered. "Well, my fine fellow, I will quickly show you. I suppose you are going to Willington hall to interview the lady."

"I confess that I have that intention."

"Then, let me assure you that without my aid you might as well hope to force your way into Windsor castle as to imagine you will get beyond the lodge gates of her residence. You doubt me! Try it! No, sir, you cannot sail on that lone tack—you and I must cruise in consort."

Harry reflected. So this distinguished literary gentleman, with the initials of a dozen learned societies tacked on to his name, was little better than a ghoul, preying on the secrets of the unfortunate. But, he argued to himself, we do not regulate the killing of vermin by the rules of venerie, so a little want of candor may be permissable in dealing with Dr. Forrester.

So he said:

"Well, perhaps you are right. Could you make it convenient to go down into Derbyshire next week, sir?"

"Aye, my dear young friend, that would suit me splendidly. Call for me here on Tuesday morning early."

Then forthwith Harry took his departure and sped in a swift hansom to his lodgings. In ten minutes after his arrival he had packed a valise and was on his way to the Midland railway station, chuckling to think how his learned friend would fume at his precipitancy.

CHAPTER XIX.
HARRY DREAMS DREAMS.

I am not going to emulate the newspaper penny-a-liner and talk about the iron horse, whose fleetness annihilates time and space; but I must share in Harry's surprise at the quickness of his journey from the metropolis to the village of Willington, a distance of one hundred and twenty-five miles, which he accomplished in little more than two hours.

In fact, the village church clock was just striking six as he strolled from the pretty railroad station to the quaint old lattice-windowed hostelry, the "Arundel Arms"—such a house of entertainment as Dickens would have loved to picture.

What a lovely place this village was—doubly lovely in Harry's eyes, for it was his first glimpse of real rural England, outside the beaten track of tourist travel.

The thatched cottages, the great gardens, the giant trees, the old stone houses, the ivy-clad church, came in for a share of his admiration.

He devoted that evening to a tete-a-tete interview of his host, a genial old fellow, who was glad to share with the young American gentleman the bottle of wine he had ordered for the "good of the house."

"Know Willington hall!" said that worthy, with a vigorous puff at his long "churchwarden" pipe. "Why, sir, I lived there man and boy for close on forty year. I've known it ever since I've known anything."

"Is it far from here?" Harry asked.

"About three miles, over the prettiest country the eye of man ever rested on."

"I heard in London that the earl has not been there for a long time," young Evesham ventured, for he knew how jealous these old retainers were of the honor of the families to which they had been attached.

"Not for twenty years. There was a good deal of talk about his going away, taking with him as he did his little blind son, with no one to tend on 'em, too, but William Bladon—though William Bladon was a right good sort for all that—and never to be heard of all these years."

An instant thought flashed through Harry's brain. So wild a conjecture that he hardly dared to entertain it.

"Lord Arlington's family name is Arundel, is it not?"

"Which it certainly is," assented John Horner. "Hence the name of my hostelry, 'The Arundel Arms.'"

Harry reflected for a minute. This landlord seemed an honest fellow. Why not take him into his confidence and make a clean breast of the object of his mission?

"Well, Mr. Horner, I know in America a young man who would be likely to correspond to the lost little blind boy."

"Indeed, sir!"

—Last Friday evening Marks, Military Band, of Renova, gave an entertainment at Garmen's Opera House. There was a fair audiance. The selections were music of a high order, beyond the comprehension of the ordinary frequenters of the Opera House entertainments. We could not get much interested in it ourselves, although several of the performers drew repeated encores from the audience and some musical critcis whom we know to be good judges said some of the performers were very fine, notably Miss Julia Swartz, a young lady only nine years old, who performed on the piano. J. D. Ubil, as tenor soloist, and John Hazel, on the cornet.

—Mr Joseph E Mitchel, the post master at State college, started last Tuesday morning for the West. He proposes to stay away several weeks and will take in St. Louis, where his daughter Maggie resides; from there he will go to Minneapolis where his son John makes his home. While there he will have an opportunity to attend the National Republican Convention and use his influence as a sort of lobbyist to secure the favorable construction of his pet candidate, if he has one? But after the nomination is made his pet man will be put before the people. He like all other good republicans, will act in harmony with the party, there are no kickers among good republicans. After visiting various other poits of interest he will return June 15th.

—Charley Noll, of the Bellefonte Telephone Exchange, was honored with a surprise party last Thursday evening in honor of his having attained his majority on that day. The guests gathered at the house of his parents on Allegheny street. Many beautiful presents were presented, a feast of good things was prepared and the guests and parents were waiting for the appearance of Charlie, anxious to see his astonishment when he should see the great host of his friends ready with presents and congratulations. At this stage of the game a telephone message was received stating that he had been suddenly called to Tyrone on business. This was ofcourse a great disappointment but they made a virtue of necessity and passed the evening in pleasant entertainments—ate drank and were merry. All expressed a hope that Charlie might live long and be happy.

BULLOCK--OWEN WEDDING.

Centre and Cumberland Mated at Mechanicsburg Last Week Wednesday.

We are indebted to the Free Press, of Mechanicsburg, for the following full account of the Bullock—Owen wedding:

The social event of the season occurred last Wednesday evening at the residence of one of our prominent business men, the manufacturer and implement dealer, Mr. C. N. Owen, East Main street. It was the occasion of the marriage of his only daughter, Miss Mary Maud, to Mr. John Montgomery Bullock, a leading merchant, of Bellefonte, Penna.

For weeks previous to the consummation of this happy event society was on the qui vive and in eager expectancy awaited the orange blossoms and wedding bells anticipated by the following sent out to upwards of 400 kindred and friends: "Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Owen request your presence at the marriage of their daughter Mary Maude and Mr. John Montgomery Bullock, Wednesday evening, April 27th, at half-past eight o'clock, Mechanicsburg, Pa.

On Monday the invited guests began to arrive followed by others on Tuesday and all through Wednesday the best of our liveries with spanking matches were rolling through our well piked thoroughfares bearing kinfolks, friends and guests. On Wednesday all nature seemed happy; old sol smiled aupiciously on Mechanicsburg and white winged messengers congratulated cupid on his final triumph. As the shades of night began to approach all about the Owen mansion was life and activity and as the rang out the guests began to arrive and were ushered into the spacious bridal home where a

SCENE OF SPLENDOR

met the gaze. The ornamentations of the house were green and white. The decoration of the interior presented a marvelous scene of floral magnificence. Suspended from the chandelier and hanging gracefully from the walls and sliding doors were long rolls of woven smilax and in star like shape knitted evergreens served as interval adornments, while stately palm, arbor vitiaes, carnations and tropical flowers were used in profusion, while beautiful ornamented devices appeared in harmony with the draping of snowy white that covered the floor and furniture. And all these handsome decorations formed a beautiful back ground for the bridal scene.

THE CEREMONY.

Promply at 8.30 o'clock the ceremony was performed. Prof. T. A. Tutton, of Carlisle presided at the piano and as the bridal procession appeared at the head of the stairway he rendered Mendelssohn's Wedding march.

When at length the bridal party appeared the whole audience arose and leaned over to catch a sight of the bridal magnificence. The bride is 21 years old and the bride's groom is 23.

First came the two ushers, Mr. Geo. W. Owen, brother of the bride and Mr. Hard Harris of Bellefonte, who took their places in the front parlor facing to the north. Next came the groom Mr. John Montgomery Bullock, accompanied by his best man, Mr Joseph Montgomery, of Bellefonte, and halted in front of the groomsmen. These gentlemen were attired in conventional black broad cloth wearing lavender kids, white ties and boutonnieres of white roses. Following these was the maid of honor Miss Helen Hastings, of Bellefonte, dressed in white and carrying a boquet of roses and lillies of the valley, and took position directly opposite the groom. Then the two bridesmaids, Miss Gertrude Mosser, of Harrisburg and Miss Kate Bullock, of Bellefonte, sister of the groom and stood in the rear of the maid of honor. They wore plain white silk gowns with Grecian drapery front and ball skirt back, with laced bodice waistback, white kids and carried boquets of white and pink roses.

THE BRIDE APPEARED

unattended and advanced to the front and stood in the north end of the room to the left of the groom and in front of the minister and as she did so the attendants all faced the ladies to the right and gentlemen to the left. Rev. J. A. Woodcock of Bellefonte officiated and performed the ceremony according to the service of the Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. W. C. Hesser pastor of the M. E. church of this place than offered the prayer; all standing reverently with bowed heads. His best man then handed the wedding ring—plain solid gold—to the groom, who placed it on the bride's finger saying as he did so, "On thee all my earthly goods do I endow, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost." The maid of honor then handed the boquet to the bride who received it with the left hand

THE BRIDAL PROUSSEAU.

The bride was attired in white crepe de chine en train maid in princess style front and watteau back entrain and wore a flowing bridal veil of white illusion caught up with white rosebuds and wore white kids and carried a boquet of easter lillies and wore a pendant with a diamond and pearls which was the gift of the groom.

After the nuptials were solemnized the congratulations followed by the family relatives and friends and invited guests.

The wedding dinner was a triumph of culinary art and was served on plates by four colored waiters from Harrisburg. About seventy five guests present partook of the sumptuous feast.

THE PRESENTS.

The bride was the recipient of two hundred handsome and valuable presents filling an entire room, and were a chief attraction of the guests. They consisted of silver and china ware; cut glass, paintings, linens, and a ful set of hand painted china now en-route from San Francisco, Cal., and the gift of Mrs. David Buel the maternal aunt of the Bride.

THE GUESTS.

The following were among the guests present: Mrs. D. H. Hastings, Miss Helen Hastings Mose Montgomery an uncle of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Montgomery and son, J. L. Montgomery, H. Montgomery, W. H. Montgomery and maid, Harry Cook, Rev. J. A. Woodcock and wife, Miss Kitty Bullock and Mr. Hard P. Harris all of Bellefonte; Rev. B. F. Stevens and Misses Annie and Nellie Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. Weston, Mr. Max and Miss Sayford, Mr. John Boyer, Mrs. Hammersley, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Black, Miss Minnie McConnell and Mrs. M. R. Mosser and daughter Miss Gertrude all of Harrisburg; Rev. Mr. Eveland, of Carlisle; Rev. Mrs. B. Mosser, of Milton; Miss Grace E. Rodfong, of Middletown; Mrs. McCune and two daughters, of Shippensburg; Mrs. Judge Tweed, of Phoenix, Arizona; Mrs. Pheobe Gibson, of Indiana, aunt of the bride.

Hoover, Misses Florence and Carrie Eberly, Mrs. Mary Kessler and daughter Nellie, Miss Allis, Miss Wheelcock, the Misses Cline, the Misses Rose, Mary and sister McFadden, R. H. Thomas and wife, Mrs. Annetta Buffington, and Mrs. Dock all of Mechanicsburg.

THE BRIDAL TOUR.

Mr. and Mrs. Bullock left on the midnight train on the bridal tour of ten days which include Philadelphia, New York and Boston. She wore a traveling dress of brown blue bard cloth with bonnet to match. On their return to Bellefonte they will board for a year and then go to housekeeping in the residence of Mr. M. Montgomery the groom's uncle.

Cards are out reading as follows: Mr. and Mrs. John Montgomery Bullock. At home Thursday after May 12. 28 North Allegheny st., Bellefonte Penna.

While Mr. and Mrs. Owen loose a daughter, they gain a son, and the FREE PRESS extends to Mr. and Mrs. Bullock our heart tfelt congratulations, and wish them a happy voyage over the matrimonial sea.

"Sweet April!—many a thought
Is wedded unto thee, as hearts are wed;
Nor shall they fail, till, to its autumn brought,
Life's golden fruit is shed.

The Century.

The Century Company, publishers, No. 33 East 17th street, New York City, make the following announcement:

There will be, practically, no change in the policy of the management of the Century Company by reason of the death of its late president, Mr. Roswell Smith. His interests in the business remain, and the affairs of the Company will be conducted by the men who have been Mr. Smith's associates for many years, and with whom he has left the business direction during the three years of his illness. Mr. Frank H. Scott, who has been connected with the company from its inception, becomes the president. The other officers, Mr. Charles F. Chichester, treasurer, and Mr. William W. Ellsworth, secretary, have been with the company almost from its beginning.

All of the important positions in the Century Company are filled by men who have an interest in the business, as Mr. Rosswell Smith has from time to time disposed of considerable portions of his stock to his associates, having in view the uninterrupted continuance of the work of the Company.

All for Temperance.

On last Sunday evening Rev. W. A. Houck, preached one of the best sermons on temperance in the Methodist church ever heard in Bellefonte. The sermon was preached to the Bellefonte temperance club, about fifty members of which attended the church in a body. In the reverend gentleman's opinion drunkenness has decreased about twenty five per cent. in the last thirty or forty years and is still on the decrease. The sermon was replete with wise sayings and was listened to by a large andience.

DEATH OF MRS. McCREARY

Sad Death of a Centre County Lady at Osceola.

On Saturday, April 23, Mrs. J. P. McCreary died at her home in Osceolo under very sad circumstances. She was the daughter of George Hoffer, of Centre Hall, and leaves a number of brothers and sisters to mourn her death. Among these are Mrs. A. C. Mingle, of this place; and Misses Fannie, Ella and Emma, at their home, John of Wyoming; Philip, in Georgia; Christ, in Altoona; J. O., in Philadelphia, and Will G., in Lamed, Kansas. From the Osceola Leader and Courier we copy the following particulars of this esteemed lady's death:

The saddest of events which can occur in a community—the death of a youug wife and mother—was recorded in the death of Mrs. J. P. McCreary, wife of Assistant Supervisor McCreary, on Saturday last.

While her death was not unexpected the shock to her family and friends was none the less profound.

She had been affected with some heart trouble for several years, but not seriously until after an attack of typhoid fever eighteen months ago, since which time the disease has gradually increased, but it was not until the past winter that she began to suffer acutely and she grew gradual ly worse until Friday night when she became dangerously ill, and the last faint hope was quenched in death on the following day at about 1 p. m.

Mrs. McCreary was born at Centre Hall Centre Co., Pa., and had just passed her 31st birthday. Her body, accompanied by numerous friends, was taken to Huntingdon, the home of her parents, on the early train Tuesday morning, and after services in the German Reformed church it was interred in the cemetery at that place.

Mrs. McCreary, while not long a resident of Osceola, had been here long enough to make friends, and it may be safely said, no enemies. Her even temperament and sunny disposition made her attractive to an unusual degree, and during the past winter her sweetness of character, her constant patience and sublime cheerfulness in despite of sleepless nights and days of distress, endeared her to al] that came in contact with her, and given us at the time a faint idea of the loss which her bereaved husband and little children have sustained. They have the sympathy of all in this their greatest possible affliction.

It is useless to speak further of her virtues, for however brief the acquaintance, she will live, while time lasts, in the hearts of her friends.

The New Orchestra.

Several years ago Bellefonters were pleased to think that the time had come when Bellefonte could boast of a superior organization in the shape of the Bellefonte Band. However, its life was a brief one as it is now a good twelve months since it ceased to exist. Nevertheless our citizens can now be proud of the fact that we will soon have a musical organization which, if it can't make as much noise as a brass band, will make a great deal better music, and that is just Prof. Meyer's new orchestra. Notwithstanding the fact that it has been but a few weeks since it was organized the members composing the same already play almost with the precision of veterans and give promise that ere many more weeks have rolled around they will be the equal, if not the superior, of any other orchestra in this state. In this respect we can not say too much in praise of Mr. Meyer's ability as an instructor. He is not only a thorough musician but seems blessed with the happy faculty of inspiring others likewise.

AN UNUSUAL LIST OF NAMES

TheCosmoplitan begins its thirteenth volume May issue, under the joint editorship of Mr. W. D. Howells and Mr Walker with a table of contents which will attract attention.

Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and W. D. Howells himself are among the contributors. The illustrations in this issue are by such well konwn artists as E. W.M Kemble, Fredric Remington, S. F. Church, Walter. Crane, William M. Chase, C. S. Reinhart, Dan Bead, George. Wharton Edwards. Wilson de Méza, ect.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for May opens with the second article in the series on "The Poor in Great Cities," in which Jacob A. Riis, the author of "How the Other Half Lives," repeats his first success which has gained him such wide recognition This time he finds a most congenial subject in "The Children of the Poor" in New York—a phase of life to which his sympathy strongly attracts him. Mr Riis knowing the gamin at first hand, through his many years of newspaper work at police headquarters. The result is that this article is filled with incidents and stories illustrating the life of the children—its humor and pathos, the element of good that is always manifested in them, and the methods which have so far proved most efficient in developing it. There is nothing farther from professional philanthropy than the spirit of Mr. Riis's article, and it appeals strongly to all right-thinking people by its humanity. The many illustrations in the article are made from photographs taken by Mr. Riis of actual characters and scenes referred to in his text. These with many others just as interesting make the many number of this exelent magazine especially valuable.

PERSONAL PENCILINGS.

Joseph H. Schenck of Howard has built a new fence in front of his residence.

Last Saturday Miss Carrie Noll and Miss Jennie Brown visited State College.

Hard Harris is visiting his brother Wilbur Harris, at Washington, D. C.

Mrs R. J. Henderson, as soprano soloist, seemed to please the audience for they called her out several times.

Mrs. Isaac Thomas, of Thomas street Bellefonte, is at present quite ill. Rheumatism is the cause of her illness.

Miss Bunn Gamble of Williamsport is visiting at Judge A. O. Furst on Linn st. She is said to be the bell of Williamsport.

John Kreamer who is three score and ten years old is confined to his bed with dropsy. It is doubtful if he will get about again.

Mr. John Richards, of Bellefonte is the lucky father of a pair of twins. If that don't make John happy what in heavens name will.

W. H. Hopkins has been visiting his family at Howard for Several weeks past. He now returned to the state of Maryland to resume his duties there.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel McGinley, are at present enjoying a visit from their daughter Mrs. Dr. Coolridge, of Scranton accompanied by her husband and children.

Some critics said the playing of the band was good but too harsh for inside, would do better on the street. Their performance on the street was well spoken of.

Mr. Thomas Echert, of Snow Shoe Intersection has had a beautiful monument erected over the grave of his wife. Mr. A. M. Mott of Bellefonte furnished the work.

Miss Rilla Bossner will this summer season deal out to thirsty persons sparkling soda and other cool drinks over the bar at Zellers, drug store she having started in on last Thursday.

W. B. Rankin, of east Curtin street Bellefonte, moves this week out of his house in order that extensive repairs and alterations may be made. He moves a few doors away into another house on same street.

Harry Warfle has been appointed postmaster at Philipsburg, against A. B. Hurd whose commission terminated on the 15th of May. The retiring official is a democrat, but the new man is a republican of pronounced stamp.

The meeting of the Christian Endeavor society, held last Friday evening in the Presbyterian Chapel, was one of more then usual interest. Prof. W. T. Myers orchester was present and furnished most excelent music while Mrs J. C. Meyer, and Miss Ella Twitmire sang a couple very sweet songs.

Lawrence L. Brown well known to all citizens of Bellefonte as a coal dealer, and well known to citizens of the whole county as ex-chairman of the county committee, has charge of the field work in taking the manufacturers bensus of Philadelphia. We suppose it must be an important appointment, or Lawrence would not have been called to it.

This book is sold only by subscription, Mr. Dunham wishes to secure local agents in every township and borough in the county to assist him in the sale of this book. It is a work that everyone should have and will meet with a ready sale, agents can make five dollars a day address.

F. S. DUNHAM,
Val-23-no-18-45 Bellefonte.

—W. F. Reeder, as attorney, purchased the Bellefonte Glass Works last Thursday for $1600. W. P. Duncan, of Philipsburg, bid $1500, these bids were in excess of a mortgage of about two thousand dollars.

THE Democrats in their wild endeavor to carry Rhode Island let it drop on their toes and lamed themselves badly.

Good Roads.

There seems to be a general movement on foot all over the county to secure an improvement in our public roads. Although the REPUBLICAN has a large circulation outside of Centre county, yet we consider ourselves to be more especially the advocate for our own county upon all questions state and national as well as local. We will say then that there is no subject of local interest which more vitally concerns our people than that of good roads. It would be difficult to estimate the value of improved public highways to our farmers as well as to all others. It would be so great that the actual cost would be insignificant by comparison. We have always thought that Centre county with her miserable township roads and her abominable pikes with a toll gate every few miles, was about fifty years behind the times on the question of good roads of all descriptions; even our pikes on which heavy toll is charged are not as good roads as a common township road should be, and then, the idea, in these latter days of a public highway being owned by a private corporation it is too absurd to need comment.

The present condition of the country roads is amazing when we consider the progress of civilization in other directions. It is only in the matter of highways that the people of Centre county have made no advance from the pioneer period. If improvements in other respects had depended on better thoroughfares we would be still struggling helplessly amid semi-barbaric environments. As it is, the time has arrived when the roads must be improved.

An agitation should be begun all through the state looking to the establishment of good county roads. In a state election a more popular issue could not be made and we believe that the Republican party could draw thousands of independent votes by the advocacy of a reform so much needed; not that we need them in this state for success, although the experience of the last state election shows us that the independent voter sometimes gets about. The statesmen who aspire to state offices should consider this subject—we believe it is worthy of their careful consideration.

"TABLE TALK"

The May issue of this valuable household magazine is already out and its contents, as usual, contain so much in the way of culinary information that a wise house would likely be the wiser for readin it. At least, that is our opinion.

Newspaper men, as a rule have not time to study up the art of cookery, but they have an appetite, and when they read a book whose very words succeed in putting a hungry edge on it, they are apt to think the author knows what he or she may be talking about. There is nothing very strange, therefore, that we welcome TABLE TALK and rank it among the pleasantest of our exchanges. Published by Table Talk Publishing Co 1113 Chestnut Streets, Philadelphia. $1.00 a year.

—The Republican has before mentioned the death of Emanuel Duey who died at Lemont on Wednesday April 13 at 2 o'clock. He was born March 4-1816 was therefore at the time of his death 76 years one month and nine days old. He was a christian all his long life having connected himself with the German Reformed church in his boyhood days. On the 28th of January 1839 a few days before his 23rd birthday he married Miss Mary A. Carter to whom he had ten children seven of whom are still living, four sons and three daughters. Mrs. Duey survives her husband. Interment was made in Houserville Cemetery Rev. A. A. Black pastor of the church to which he belonged preached the funeral sermon. He lived a long and useful life and died trusting in the God he so faithfully had served, loved and honored by all who knew him.

Coming Attraction.

The DeLong and Rising Comedy Company in "Tangled Up." Will appear in Garman's Opera House on Monday May 20. It will be for the benefit of the Tyrone Lodge, B. P. O. E. There are ten ore twelve members of the Elks in Bellefonte.

Clemson—Gray—On Tuesday April 26th at Stormstown Frank Clemson, of Benore to Miss Eva Gray of Buffalo Run Mrs. Clemson is a daughter of Oscar Gray one of our most prosperous farmers, Mr. Clemson is manager for Carnagie Bros. at Scotia.

In 1888 the Democrats shouted, "There is a surplus in the Treasury. Reduce the tariff and the revenues." Now the cry is, "The surplus in the Treasury is exhausted. Reduce the tariff and the revenues." Which means that the principal point with the Democrats is to reduce or abolish the tariff without regard to the needs of the revenue.
